Water and sanitation in emergencies

Fast action can stop an emergency turning into a crisis. Our water engineers are renowned for their speed and efficiency, providing large-scale water supplies and disease-preventing sanitation facilities - even in the most difficult circumstances such as the Nepal earthquake and the Pakistan floods. In each situation, we look for the most effective and efficient way to provide water - setting up delivery systems that pipe or truck water in from the nearest water source for distribution via water tanks, pipes and tapstands.

We always work with local people, taking their needs and practices into account. We ensure that facilities are designed to enable people - particularly women and children - to maintain their dignity and stay safe. We also provide health and hygiene advice to ensure water and sanitation facilities are used properly to help prevent the spread of disease.

Worldwide, more than 660 million people lack access to safe water and more than 2 billion don’t have adequate sanitation.

In emergencies, many more lives are put at risk by inadequate water supplies and poor sanitation. It’s estimated that each person needs 15 litres of water per day for drinking, cooking and washing in an emergency. This makes providing clean water a massive task requiring the sort of specialist skills and equipment Oxfam has.
Some tried and tested fundraising ideas:

Duck race

Get people to pay to adopt a rubber duck (or more than one) which is numbered. Once all the ducks have been adopted they are released into a river, canal or stream with the fastest duck winning. The winner gets a prize and then the profits can be donated to support Oxfam. The great thing about organising a duck race is that you can decide how large you’d like it to be. Small races can have 100 ducks in a local stream and larger races can have 1,000s of ducks in a large river. For advice on lottery regulations and health and safety speak to your Regional Fundraising Manager.

Afternoon tea

Get the best china out, boil the kettle and bake something sweet (check out health and safety first). You could hold your event at work, at home or at a bigger venue depending how many people you expect to come. Ask for donations in return for refreshments and enjoy the day.

River of pennies

For a more simple idea you could draw out a ‘river’ on the floor with chalk and aim to fill it with pennies. It can be as large or small as you like and if you want to raise more money you could use silver coins instead.

Kayak rally

Gather any boating friends and have an event in aid of Oxfam! At the Exeter Kayak rally in May 2015, 70 paddlers raised an amazing £1,400. Check with your Regional Fundraising Manager about health and safety requirements for the event.

Sponsored swim

Find a group of people who want to take part. Plan how far you would like to swim and when your event could take place, and then get in touch with local swimming pools to arrange a date. Set up an online page to get sponsored at fundraising.oxfam.org.uk

River walk

If you live near a river, canal or by the sea you could organise a walk to a local landmark or the next town. Encourage people to get sponsored or pay a fee to take part. If you don’t live near water you could carry a bucket of water instead, like the Bath Fundraising Group who raised £700 on their Water Walk, they carried 12 litres of water along the 9-mile canal towpath to raise awareness of the long distances many people in developing countries have to walk daily to collect water.

Keeping it safe and legal

Small but important details like carrying a first aid kit, knowing where the fire exits are if you’re hiring a venue, and checking any equipment you are using is critical. You can get free health and safety advice from The Health and Safety Executive online.

You’ll need to do a risk assessment for your event and make sure you are covered by insurance. If you would like some guidance with these please contact your Regional Fundraiser.
